

SPRING 2021 INTERDISCIPLINARY COURSES: POLICY & DIVERSITY, EQUITY & INCLUSION

Course	Time/Location	Description
EDF5652: Policy Development in Education	Wed, 3:05-4:20 PM Remote	This course explores the United States' policymaking process in all its stages including problem identification, agenda setting, policy formation, policy adoption, implementation and evaluation. In so doing, it surveys a broad range of K-12 and postsecondary education policies.
EDG5709: Culturally Responsive Teaching for Equitable Instruction	Wed, 8:00-10:30 AM Remote or ONLINE	This course addresses culturally responsive teaching and how it can be used to improve the academic performance of culturally and linguistically diverse learners including those living in poverty as well as those with differing family structures.
EDH5046: Diversity in Higher Education	Remote	This course is designed to examine historical and contemporary diversity-related issues in higher education. Students explore racial development theories and examine controversies in policy and practice across three major areas in higher education: campus climate, outcomes, and curriculum. Additionally, students increase their knowledge, awareness, and skills related to working with diverse populations.
LAE5348: Teaching Multiliteracies	Wed, 4:50-7:20 PM Remote	This course addresses the field of new literacy studies and identifies how emerging understandings of literacy can support the development of literacy practices in academic settings. Students examine the attributes of multiliterate learners and focus on how to develop those attributes through a variety of academic and popular culture texts.
MHS6930: Diversity Seminar in Health Service Psychology	Thurs, 1:20-3:50 PM Remote	This doctoral seminar immerses students in diversity-related content intended to facilitate the continued development of their multicultural awareness, knowledge, and skills towards an understanding of intersectionality, social justice, and advocacy.
