Ecosystems

Official Rules

1. DESCRIPTION: The American Bar Association Section of Environment, Energy, and Resources 2023 Law Student Writing Competition: Air, Climate, and Ecosystems (“Competition”) is sponsored by the Section of Environment, Energy, and Resources (“Section”) of the American Bar Association (“ABA” or “Sponsor”). The goal of the Competition is to encourage law students to become involved in the Section. It is also intended to attract students to air quality, climate change, ecosystems, endangered species, sustainable development, and wildlife legal practice areas, and to encourage scholarship in these areas. Each entrant must follow the rules of the Competition detailed herein.
2. ELIGIBILITY: The Competition is open to any law student who, at the time of entry, (1) is enrolled in an ABA-accredited law school in good standing during the academic year of the Competition, (2) is a legal resident of the United States, and (3) is at least 18 years old. Directors, officers, and employees of the ABA and their immediate family or household members are not eligible.
3. TOPIC: Entries for the Competition should demonstrate original thought on a question of legal or policy significance related to existing federal, state, and/or local regulatory frameworks in the context of climate change. Successful entries will explore the boundary of the existing regulatory regime as it relates to climate change and its impacts on air quality, wildlife, endangered species, ecosystems, and/or sustainable development. Entries might consider whether existing laws and regulations are sufficient to meet the various challenges related to climate change and its impacts. Entries may identify and discuss specific legal changes or other reforms that could be effectively address existing regulatory gaps. Entries might explain why more comprehensive legal reform is needed to meet the challenges posed by climate change or argue for other ways the law could be retooled to more effectively address the impacts of climate change. In selecting a topic, participants are encouraged to think broadly about the relevant legal and policy issues. The decision of whether a particular essay qualifies as to subject matter is entirely within the discretion of the Sponsor.
4. SUBMISSION REQUIREMENTS: All submissions must be the original, unpublished work of the entrant. Any relevant article or essay may be submitted for the Competition, including writing submitted for academic credit. Submissions must not have been previously published in any media.
